Mr J. Campbell
Grays Market

Alphington Essex

My dear Sir, The minute ^{after} I had sent off my letter to you I received yours of y^e 1st which I should not have acknowledged so soon, but to assure you, that the rumour of my having abandoned my sentiments of the revival in Wales, is entirely unfounded. When Mr. Charles was in London, he told me, that what appeared sudden & extraordinary in the affair, was in a great measure subsided, & that some who were affected they knew not well why were returning to their former level; but that he hoped the revival itself, was in the main solid & abiding.
This is as much as I expected, & this is all I have known of the matter since Mr. Charles wrote to you. Therefore my sentiment, that many blaspheems would fall off, & my hope that many would abide, & yield good fruit, remains still the same.

I thank you for your information respecting the Letters to a Wife. You will perceive by the preface, that I was aware of the different opinions, which would be formed of a Book rather Novel in its kind. None but married persons can be competent judges of the Subject. Nor all of these.
The unfeeling, the Careless & the Licentious, will think it perhaps soddy & folly. But as I said, if my leading motive was right, I ought to be in good measure indifferent to the judgment of Menials. To be sure it was a high gratification to me to erect a Monument of affection & gratitude to the memory of my excellent Wife - but had this been my only view, I durst not have done it. I intended it chiefly as a Memorial of the Lords goodness to a Chief sinner, to confirm the account again given in my Narrative, & to record many additional instances of his Wonderful Providence in my favour. I thought likewise it would afford proof, that there be a degree of conscientious regard to the Lord, of submission to his Will, of dependance upon his care, & of answers to prayer, in a person whose doctrinal light is very indistinct, & before he has formed a systematic & clear view of the Truths. Indeed this my knowledge was at times, more defective than it is even now, some of the ^{best} ~~best~~ days of Communion with God, I ever knew, ~~and~~ while I was a Sailor, & particularly in the my third & last voyage to Africa. Indeed I wish I have ought to say, I ^{could} trust him as singly at present, as I did then.

I felt a desire of publishing some extracts of my Letters to her, from the day that she left me, & perhaps sooner. But I deliberated upon it a whole year before I undertook it. I submitted it frequently to the Lord; & from the time I began, I believe I may say, there was not a page of it written, without prayer for his direction & guidance I hope he ~~enabled~~ inclined me to begin, I am sure he enabled me to finish; for tho' it was in the main a pleasing task, but it was painfully pleasing. It cost me not only prayers, but tears. I thank him that is now abroad. I trust I shall never repent of it, I rather expect it will be a source of comfort to me, to the end of life, that I was spared to complete it.

With respect to others, I hoped it might be read with some pleasure, & perhaps benefit, by some who ^{live me} have outlived their youth.
There

It might ^{afford} useful hints in the way of some who are about to enter, or may have newly entered the Marriage state. That it might convince some who have imbibed prejudices against Marriage, & convince them that there is more satisfaction to be found in that state when properly conducted than they are aware of. I hoped likewise that others might be cautioned by my example, ^{against} that over-abbatement, which sometimes cost me so dear. And I hope & believe that where the Lord shall have shown you the proper person appointed to bear your Name, & has brought you together, you will not regard the time you spent in reading Letters to a Wife.

The history of my trial, in the appendix N^o 1 is to me the most interesting part. When I reflect, (which is but every day) how I lived, what I felt, & how I was supported, it seems the most remarkable part, of my remarkable life. Surely had not the Lord ~~supported~~ been my helper, I had sunk like a stone in deep water. I thank him, that I could bear such a testimony to his Faithfulness & All sufficiency.

I have been already favoured with notices that my book has been useful in most or all the cases, I have mentioned.
And therefore I am not much afraid of the censure of severe Critics. Papers & his own are brought to a close together. I can only add my love thanks & best wishes, with Miss Catlett's respects, & am assured that I am your affectionate & obli-g'd John Newton
